Army Corps Commanders.

Only two of the army and corps commanders who served under Sherman attended the unveiling—Gen. O. O. Howard and Gen. Grenville M. Dodge. These two veterans stand as the representatives of Logan, McPherson, and the other commanders, who have passed to the land where war is unknown. In General Dodge, who has borne the weight of years so gracefully, and General Howard, the members of the Army of the Tennessee could see the gallant young officers who led them forty years ago.

Minute Men Act as

Escort to President

Garbed in the historic uniform of the Continental soldier, one hundred members of the First Regiment of Minute Men, under Colonel M. A. Winter, escorted the President and his party to their positions in the north stand. The Minute Men were drawn up at the southeast gate of the White House grounds, where they awaited the President, members of the Cabinet, the statue commission, and other notables. The party then proceeded to the President's stand, entering by the northwest gate. After seeing the distinguished participants safely into the President's box, the Minute Men took up their position with the 200 crippled veterans of the civil war, at the base of the statue.

The President, occupying the post of honor in the center of the box, was surrounded by a notable company. This included Gen. Grenville M. Dodge, Lieut. Gen. S. B. M. Young, and Assistant Secretary of War Robert Shaw Oliver, composing the commission; Secretaries Hay, Hitchcock, Wilson, and Cortelyou; Attorney General Knox; and Postmaster General Payne; Bishop Henry Yates Satterlee, the Rev. Dr. D. J. Stafford; the four speakers, Col. David B. Henderson of Iowa, Gen. Thomas J. Henderson of Illinois; Gen. Charles H. Grosvenor, and Gen. Daniel E. Sickles; the President's aides, Col. Thomas W. Symons, U. S. A., and Capt. W. S. Cowles, U. S. N.; the President's secretaries, Mr. Loebe, Mr. Barnes, and Mr. Latta; the widow of the sculptor, Mrs. Sara Rohl-Smith, accompanied by Peter Suhr and Master W. T. S. Thorndike.

After the Parade Passed.

When the parade had passed there was a brief interval of hurrying to and fro, while the park settees were brought into the avenue between the stands. The spectacle in the great amphitheater was beautiful, with flags and banners flying. The massive statue, with the huge flags concealing it, seemed to loom up like a great iceberg rising out of the sea of spectators.

The hum of conversation ceased as General Dodge, president of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee, called the great audience to order and introduced the Rev. Dr. D. J. Stafford, pastor of St. Patrick's Church, who pronounced the invocation.

Loud applause greeted General Dodge as he rose to make the opening address.

The soldiers whose seats flanked the statue were seated in the front of the officer, who was entrusted with such important commissions by General Sherman, and who so thoroughly enjoyed the confidence of his superior officer.

The bas-reliefs on the north front, explained General Dodge, represent the march to the sea, on the east front Sherman at Chattanooga attacking Bragg's right, on the south front the battle of Atlanta on July 22, and on the south front Sherman meditating before his tent. The medallions represent the army corps commanders of the Army of the Tennessee under Sherman—McPherson, Howard, Logan, Blair, Smith, Grierson, Ransom, and Dodge. General Dodge concluded by saying that while it was truly unfortunate that the sculptor died when his work was half completed, the societies of the four great armies wished to extend their heartfelt thanks to Mrs. Carl Rohl-Smith for her success in finishing the work begun by her husband.

The Statue Unveiled.

At the signal from General Dodge the Marine Band began playing "The Star-Spangled Banner," and General Sherman's young grandson pulled the ropes which raised the great American flag from the bronze figure of the hero and allowed the magnificent equestrian statue to be viewed by the thousands of spectators who jumped to their feet and cheered the music of the nation's band with loud cheers.

Handkerchiefs and hats leaped into the air in confusion, and the great crowd moved as one person in paying tribute to the sculptor's handiwork. Greater enthusiasm has not been displayed in Washington since the grand review of troops at the close of the civil war.

President Roosevelt led the cheering.

He waved his hat with as much enthusiasm as the veterans who were living over the stirring scenes of the sixties.

The President's Tribute To "Old Tecumseh"

As soon as the cheering ceased General Dodge introduced the President. It was several minutes before Mr. Roosevelt could speak, so hearty was his reception. He spoke as follows:

"Today we meet together to do honor to the memory of one of the great men whom, in the hour of our agony, our nation brought forth for her preservation. The civil war was not only in the importance of the issues at stake and of the outcome the greatest of modern times, but it was also, taking into account the duration, the severity of the fighting, and the size of the armies engaged, the greatest since the close of the Napoleonic struggles."

"Among the generals who rose to high position as leaders of the various armies in the field are many who will be remembered in our history as long as this history itself is remembered. Sherman, the incarnation of fiery energy and prowess; Thomas, far-sighted and cool-headed, whose steadfast courage burned as brightly as the sun in the supreme moment of the crisis; McClellan, with his extraordinary gift for organization; Meade, victor in one of the decisive battles of the war; Grant, the great general, the fighting man among the regulars; Logan, type of the true fighting man among the volunteers; the names of these and of many others will endure so long as our people hold sacred the memory of the fight for union and for liberty."

"High among these chiefs rise the figures of Grant and of Grant's great lieutenant, Sherman, whose statue here in the National Capital is today to be unveiled. It is not necessary here to go over the long roll of Sherman's mighty feats. They are written large throughout the history of the civil war. Our memories would be poor indeed if we did not recall them now, as we look along Pennsylvania Avenue and think of the great march, the march which surged down its length when at the close of the war the victorious armies of the United States met here in the National Capital of the Nation they had saved. There is a peculiar fitness in commemorating the great deeds of the soldiers who preserved this nation, by suitable monuments at the National Capital. I trust we shall soon have a proper statue of Abraham Lincoln, to whom more than to any other man this nation owes its salvation. Meanwhile, on behalf of one people of the nation, I wish to congratulate all of you who have been instrumental in securing the erection of this statue to General Sherman.

The living can best show their respect for the memory of the great dead by the way in which they take to heart and act upon the lessons taught by the lives which made these dead men great. Our homage today to the memory of Sherman comes from the depths of our being. We would be unworthy citizens did we not feel profound gratitude toward him, and those like him, and under him, who, when the country called in her dire need, sprang forward with such gallant eagerness to answer that call. Their blood and their toil, their endurance and patriotism, have made us and all who come after us not merely a reunited country, but a country locally greater because of its rich heritage in the deeds which thus left it reunited. As a nation we are the greater, not only for the valor and devotion to duty displayed by the men in blue, who won in the great struggle for the Union, but also for the valor and loyalty toward what they regarded as right of the men in gray; for this war, three fortunate alike to all of us the right of brotherhood alike with valiant victor and valiant vanquished."

Moreover, our homage must not only find expression on our lips; it must also show itself in our deeds. It is a great and glorious thing for a nation to be stirred to present triumph by the splendid memories of triumphs in the past. But it is a shame and a disgrace if these memories stir it only to empty boasts, to a pride that does not shrink from the admission that the self-satisfaction which accepts the high resolve and unbending effort of the past, and the self-satisfaction or wrongly directed effort in the present. If we are to live, if we are to be great, if we are to be the nation that we have learned aright the lessons taught by the men who did the mighty deeds of the past, we must strive to be as good as they were."

"We must have in us the spirit which made the men of the civil war what they were; the spirit which produced the great deeds of the past, the spirit which gave to the average soldier the grim tenacity and resourcefulness that made the armies of Grant and Sherman as formidable fighting machines as this world has ever seen. We need their ruggedness of body, their keen and vigorous minds, and above all their dominant quality of forceful character. Their lives teach us in our own lives to strive after not the thing which is merely pleasant, but the thing which is our duty to do. The life of duty—not the life of mere ease or mere pleasure—that is the kind of life which makes the great man, as it makes the great nation."

The Army and Navy.

We cannot afford to lose the virtues which made the men of '73 to '75 great in war. No man is warranted in feeling pride in the deeds of the army and navy of the past if he does not back up the army and the navy of the present. If we are frightened in our patriotism, there will be no let up in the work of building and of keeping at the highest point of efficiency, a navy suited to the part the United States must hereafter play in the world, and of making and keeping our small regular army, which in the event of a great emergency would be the nucleus around which our volunteer army must form themselves, the best army of its size to be found among the nations."

So much for our duties in keeping unstained the honor roll our fathers made in war. It is of even more infant need that we should show their spirit of patriotism in the affairs of peace. The duties of peace are with us always; those of war are but occasional; and with a nation as with a man, the worthiness of life depends upon the way in which everyday duties are done. The home duties are the vital duties. The nation is nothing but the aggregate of the families within its border; and if the average man is not hard-working, just, and fearless in his dealings with those about him, then our average of public life will in the end be low; for the stream can rise no higher than its source. But in addition we need to remember that a peculiar responsibility rests upon the man in public life.

We meet in the Capital of the nation, in the city which owes its existence to the fact that it is the seat of the National Government. It is well for us in this place, and at this time, to remember that exactly as there are certain homely qualities the lack of which will prevent the most brilliant man alive from being a useful soldier to his country, so there are homely qualities the lack of which in the public servant no shrewdness or ability can atone. The greatest leaders, whether in war or peace, must of course show a peculiar quality of genius; but the most redoubtable armies that have ever existed have been led by the average officer, possessed to a high degree such comparatively simple qualities as loyalty, courage, and hardihood. And so the most successful governments are those in which the average public servant possesses that variety of loyalty which we call patriotism, together with common sense and honesty.

Dishonesty in Public Service.

We can as little afford to tolerate a dishonest man in the public service as a coward in the army. The murderer takes a single life, the corrupt politician a single life, whether he be bribe giver or bribe taker, strikes at the heart of the nation. In every public service, as in every army, there will be wrongdoers, there will be misdeeds. This cannot be avoided; but vigilant watch must be kept, and as soon as discovered the wrongdoers must be stopped and the wrongdoers punished. Remember that in popular government we must keep the heart of the nation for the punishment and the reformation.

Those upon whom our institutions cast the initial duty of bringing malefactors to the bar of justice must be diligent in their discharge of this duty. The public service of corruption must depend upon the attitude of the courts and of the juries drawn from the people. Leadership is of avail only so far as there is a wise and resolute public sentiment behind it.

In the long run, then, it depends upon ourselves, upon us the people as a whole, whether this Government is to stand in the future as it has stood in the past; and my faith that it will show no falling off is based upon my faith in the character of our average citizenry. The one supreme duty to try to keep this average high. To this end it is well to keep alive the memory of those men who are fit to serve as examples of what is loftiest and best in American citizenship. Such a man was General Sherman. To very few in any generation is it given to render such services as he rendered; but each of us in his degree can try to show something of those qualities of character upon which, in their sum, the high worth of Sherman rested—his courage, his kindness, his clean and simple living, his sturdy good sense, his manliness, and tenderness in the intimate relations of life, and finally, his inflexible rectitude of soul and his loyalty to all that in this free Republic is hallowed and symbolized by the national flag.

in the North Stand

The President's stand, adjoining the reviewing box, held a most distinguished company. Section A, at the west end of the stand, was reserved exclusively for members of the Sherman family and connections. The family of Dr. Thorndike, son-in-law of General Sherman and father of Master William Tecumseh Sherman Thorndike, occupied a dozen seats in the first and second rows. From this location the finest view of the statue was possible. Directly next on the west was Mrs. Nelson A. Miles, niece of General Sherman and wife of the former commanding general of the army.

Others of the Sherman kin in this section were the Rev. Thomas E. Sherman, of Chicago; P. T. Sherman and family, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Fitch and family, of Pittsburg; Consul General M. Thaddeus and family, Mr. and Mrs. Hoyt Sherman, of Salt Lake City; Major Hoyt Sherman and Arthur Sherman, of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. James I. McCallum, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Mrs. Roosevelt was accompanied to the President's stand by Miss Hagner. They were escorted by Major Charles Macawley, U. S. M. C., detailed at the White House, and occupied the first two seats in the right section of the stand. Mrs. Knox was the ranking woman of the Cabinet circle present, the others being Mrs. Payne, Mrs. Hitchcock, and the Misses Hitchcock, Miss Wilson, and Mrs. Cortelyou. In the front row, next to the District Commissioners, was Mrs. Poe, of Coburg, Canada, whose husband served on General Sherman's staff in the civil war.

General Young's daughters, Mrs. Knight and Mrs. Charters, with Mrs. Eleanor Martin and Mr. Harvey, of New York, occupied seats adjoining the diplomatic contingent. Mrs. John A. Logan sat next to the Cabinet women in the north stand. Mr. and Mrs. McLanahan and Miss McLanahan, ex-Secretary and Mrs. J. B. Henderson, of Boundary Castle; Mr. and Mrs. John E. Reuburn.

IMPORTANT TO KNOW.

Why the Fall Is One of the Most Dangerous Seasons of the Year

The fall is one of the most dangerous seasons of the year, because the hot summer days have taxed the system, overheated the blood, and weakened the heart.

It is important to know that Father John's Medicine is probably the only tried and proven family remedy that can be traced directly to the physician who prescribed it originally. Not a patent medicine, but the prescription of an eminent specialist who prescribed it for the late Rev. Father John O'Brien, of St. Patrick's Parish, Lowell, Mass., fifty years ago, by whom it was recommended and from whom it derived its name.

This prescription contains no opium, morphine, or poisonous narcotics in any form, as over 98 per cent of the patent medicines and cough mixtures do. It cures the autumn colds, coughs, and builds you up; it is pure nourishment for the blood and nerves, prevents pneumonia and all lung troubles. It is better to begin taking it now than to have to call the doctor later on. Save money by buying the 21 bottle, which contains three times as much as the 50-cent size.
